Dr Yousefi-Nooraie is an assistant professor at University of Rochester, NY, and an assistant professor (status) at the Institute of Health Policy, Management, and Evaluation, University of Toronto. His main line of interest includes the application of a social network analysis lens to inform and promote the process of knowledge translation and program implementation. He is interested in designing network informed and network rewiring interventions, and studying networks as the outcome of the implementation.

He is also interested in mixed methods studies, and the dialogue and integration between quantitative and qualitative approaches, and how the integration can deepen our understanding of social structures and interpersonal relations.
